

Additionally, to my last comment, I would like to add:

Regarding the "call letters" of the LPAM stations. I feel changing the format of the current means of identification of radio stations, to another "style" of call letters, will be a burden to the FCC, and cause some confusion, as to the "station" itself, that is, if a listener hears what is not "the standard" call letters, the possibility of confusion may exist.

The burden of the FCC to establish another "form" of call letters, to re-design, and re-program existing software, and means to file for change of call's, and other administration connected with call letters for both type of stations, may be a burden on the FCC and other established business that produce broadcasting audio production and have set templates and equipment for such.

The selection of the LPAM's call letters should be kept the same as current selection of all broadcast facilities, this will ensure even and sure flow of the identification of a station, and to keep the identification process the same as it always has been from the beginning.

Therefore, I suggest, keeping the selection of a LPAM's call letters the same as current selections.

Thank you for the opportunity to voice my opinions.
William Blew